Man faces trial in attack on dog

ROCKFORD — A man has been ordered to stand trial on charges he repeatedly bashed a dog in the head with a hammer in front of family members, then slammed the 100-pound animal onto the hood of his ex-wife's car.

Testimony about the alleged actions of Mark William Kruithoff, 35, led a judge on Wednesday to raise the Jenison man's bond and send him back to jail.

"I've been here 28 years, and there aren't many things I haven't heard. Some have been pretty bad," Rockford District Judge Steven Servaas told Kruithoff.

The dog was alive when the deputy arrived, but in great pain. With the deputy watching, Kruithoff's father, Martin, put the animal out of its misery by shooting it.

Senate plan would define, improve failing schools

Bills designed to help ailing institutions get assistance they need

By Dee-Ann Durbin
Associated Press

Failing schools would be evaluated on their academics, management and finances and told to follow an improvement plan under legislation unveiled Thursday by Republican state senators.

The bills would define "priority schools" as the bottom 5 percent statewide as ranked by test scores, free lunch eligibility, dropout rates, graduation rates and the percentage of students reading at grade level.

Eventually, other measurement categories would be added, including teacher and student attendance rates.

Once failing schools are evaluated, a board that includes lawmakers and the state superintendent would take corrective measures.

Those could include hiring consultants or management companies, placing the intermediate school district in charge of the smaller district's operations or opening more charter schools within the district.

"We feel an obligation to figure our how to help every school in this state succeed," said Senate Majority Leader Dan DeGrow, D-Port Huron, who helped develop the plan.

Sen. Leon Stille, R-Spring Lake, stressed that the state is trying to help, not take over all failing schools as it did in Detroit in 1999.

The Senate Education Committee has been trying to come up with a definition of a "priority school" since the beginning of this year. The committee took testimony from more than 100 people before drafting the new bills.

Several groups, including the Michigan Education Association and the Middle Cities Education Association, said they preferred the new plan to the Michigan Department of Education's accreditation plan, which was scheduled to go into effect this spring.

That plan, which was postponed because of complaints from schools, relied primarily on state test scores to rank schools and didn't consider factors such as the number of students getting free or reduced-priced lunches.

The Senate proposal also won praise from charter school advocate Dan Quisenberry, who is the head of the Michigan Association of Public School Academies. He said the plan will force all public schools to adopt the same kind of accountability standards that charters must follow.

"If our schools don't succeed, they close," Quisenberry said.

But the nonprofit Choices for Children, which promotes charter schools and vouchers, said the bills don't go far enough.

"Creating a new level of bureaucracy does nothing to help children who are currently being left behind," said Choices for Children director Betsy DeVos.

The bills will be introduced Tuesday on the Senate floor.

Failing schools

Details of the Senate Education Committee's bills to identify and improve failing schools:

Criteria:

Until Dec. 31, 2001, a failing — or "priority" — district or charter school would be identified by its ranking in the lowest 5 percent of three of these five categories:

- Scores from the Michigan Education Assessment Program tests
- Free and reduced-price lunch eligibility
- Dropout rate
- Graduation rate
- Students reading below grade level

After Jan. 1, 2002, districts would be evaluated in these three additional categories, and priority schools would be the lowest 5 percent in five of the eight categories:

- Pupil attendance rate
- Teacher attendance rate
- ACT test scores

Lawmakers push bill for 'Choose Life' plates

Abortion proponents say proposal would give wrong image of state

By Dee-Ann Durbin
Associated Press

If two Republican lawmakers have their way, motorists could buy a state license plate that reads "Choose Life" with the extra fee supporting pregnancy centers that don't counsel patients about abortion.

The proposal by Sen. Valde Garcia of St. Johns and Rep. Gary Newell of Saranac raised immediate concerns for Rebekah Warren of the Michigan Abortion and Reproductive Rights Action League.

"At the most basic level, folks driving around seeing a Michigan license plate with a phrase so closely associated with the anti-abortion movement . . . will think that implies that the state doesn't support abortion," she said.

But Garcia said the plate would be just another in a line of specialty plates allowed by the state that support causes such as wildlife, lighthouse restoration and state universities.

Garcia

"Michigan's new specialty license plates have given people the chance to support numerous worthy causes," Garcia said. "Helping people who face unexpected or crisis pregnancies is one of the most important causes I know."

This week Garcia and Newell introduced bills that would allow motorists to buy the plate for $25 more than a regular plate. The $25 would be donated to a nonprofit crisis pregnancy center in the motorist's county that doesn't perform or discuss abortions.

Warren pointed out that "Choose Life" plates are being legally challenged in Florida and Louisiana courts. In Louisiana, a judge has ruled that the plates could be unconstitutional because they don't present both sides of the abortion debate.

Other states considering legislation to add the plates include Texas, Alabama, Minnesota, Mississippi, Ohio, Pennsylvania and North Carolina.

Warren said having the plates fund crisis pregnancy centers is inappropriate because the centers mislead women.

"They provide false information and use fear tactics to dissuade them from looking at their full range of choices," she said.

But Newell said the centers help women "in one of their greatest times of need."

"I anticipate there will be a great demand for these plates," he said.

A spokeswoman for Secretary of State Candice Miller said the "Choose Life" plate is one of several fund-raising plate ideas that have been submitted. She said Miller has no position on whether to issue new plates.

"We are not actively opposing or supporting any legislation to establish new fund-raising license plates. It is an issue for the Legislature to decide," spokeswoman Elizabeth Boyd said.
